I like most of them, and have given many five star ratings, but China Boy really is the best. Their menu is small, their space isn't much bigger, and their hours are a bit inconvenient, but they have it where it counts, the food itself. I order popcorn chicken and a noodle crepe from China Boy almost every week. It's my favorite lunch in DC.

While this is less a masculine Joy Luck Club than a Chinese Prince of Central Park (by Evan H. Rhodes, Coward, 1975. o.p.), China Boy resonates with strong characterizations, evocative descriptions of San Francisco in the 1950s, and the righteous indignation of abused innocence. For most fiction collections.
